1 IN 4 SPANISH TEENS CYBER-BULLIED THIS YEAR

- 1 A new report out of the University of Valencia in Spain finds that roughly one in four teens studied has been bullied either by cell phone or on the Internet at some point over the past year. The team reports that most cyber-bullying lasts less than a month.
- 5 While these findings may sound reasonable, a 25-country European Union study called 'EU Kids Online' reports the European cyber-bullying average far lower, at 5 percent, with Spain being even slightly below that average.
- 10 The study was only carried out in the Valencia region and only used input from 2,101 teens ages 11 to 17. But still, among that population, researchers found that while 24.6 percent of teens were bullied by cell phone and 29 percent on the Internet, and most of them for less than a month, 4 percent of teens studied were bullied over the course of three to six months and 3 percent were bullied for more than a year.
- 15 The study shows that girls, in most cases, suffer more bullying than boys, particularly verbal abuse, invasions of privacy, spreading of rumours and social exclusion. It is very important to raise young people's awareness, since
- 18 they are often not aware of the repercussions of their actions.

Option B

TRAVEL TOURISM AND FICTION

1 In 2003, Stephanie Meyer decided to set Twilight, her vampire saga, in a place where the gloomy weather would enable the teenage vampires to attend school on cloudy, rainy days. She discovered that a town called Forks was the rainfall capital of America, so it is there that the pale and interesting Edward Cullen meets Bella Swan. After the success of Meyer's novels, tourists began to visit the town in 2006. Then the movies came and the number of visitors increased by thousands a year.

10 Twilight isn't the only work of fiction playing a role in the travel and tourism industry. Another example can be found in Las Vegas, the home to the original of the famous forensics TV shows. There you can enjoy the CSI Experience at MGM Grand Hotel. It offers three possible scenarios: a dead waitress in a side street, a car smashed through a suburban living room or a body buried out in the desert. You are given clues, suspects and an autopsy; then, like a scary version of Cluedo, you have to decide who did what to whom and why. It takes 60-90 minutes to solve your case; at the end, a virtual Grissom announces whether you are right or not.
