OPTION A

A GAP YEAR

- 1 A gap year is a period of time when students take a break from formal education to travel, volunteer, study, intern, or work. A gap year experience can last for several weeks up to a year or more. Typically a gap year is taken between high school graduation and starting college, during college, or between college and starting graduate school or a career.
- 6 The gap year is becoming increasingly popular with US students. One reason is that parents are more open to the idea nowadays. Studies conclusively show that students who take a year out before college are more focused and motivated when they arrive on campus than those who don't take this detour. Harvard's admissions department is so convinced of the benefits of a gap year that they offer the option to every admitted freshman in their acceptance letter.
- 12 Taking time out between high school and college used to evoke fear that the student would not follow through with college. Today, the college admissions offices at universities are getting more requests from students who have previously enjoyed a gap year. This trend is great news for both colleges, students and parents. Given the fact that the dropout rate amongst US college freshman is nearly 30 percent, the gap year option is fast becoming a viable alternative for many students.

OPTION B

WHAT IS LAUGHTER THERAPY?

- 1 Ramsey Campbell once spoke to the BBC about people's fear of clowns, which he believes is due to a clown's unchanging mask of forced comicality. Yet advocates of laughter therapy believe that laughing is what helps us rid ourselves of our own masks of fear and pain. From workplaces to therapists' offices to hospitals, laughter coaches aim to get people laughing in an effort to get them to be their best selves. By laughing, the theory goes, you're able to keep your cool in a stressful work situation, make peace with the hurt and pain in your past or deal with the stress of a serious illness. That doesn't mean miserable days are completely gone. Laughter therapy can't take the place of conventional therapies entirely, but there is increasing evidence that a few hearty laughs can help you along the road to recovery. Laughter is believed to be beneficial to patients because it reduces anxiety and stress, renders pain manageable and bolsters the immune system. Yet humor is highly subjective -what gives one person the giggles might just as easily put another to sleep. Part of laughter therapy is figuring out exactly what stimulates your funny bone, so that getting some healing laughs can be just as easy as popping in a DVD.

QUESTIONS

[1] FOLLOWING THE INSTRUCTIONS, ANSWER QUESTIONS A, B, C
(3 POINTS AS A WHOLE).
